

Connect the Dots

*By definition,
that which has no life cannot die.*

*Life is therefore defined by death;
without death, life can have no meaning.*

*Does this not make death the epitome of life,
if not its crowning glory?*

*And should that be any wonder,
as death only marks the time when we go back into the oneness of God?*