

Cycles

Da Vinci has observed, very simply, that “wood nourishes the fire that consumes it”.

*He makes no pursuant comment on the fact that what remains are ashes and smoke, both of which return the elements of that wood to their place in the universe, always, to become wood again, perhaps,
for some new fire.*

It is a fitting metaphor for the cyclical nature of all things in space and eternity --- and suitable as a framework for understanding and, in fact, reckoning a justification for societal conditions.
